WHAT TOURIST CAMP MEANS TO TRAVELER

(Continued from Page 2.) which includes the vast tract of land which is the site of the camp. Each member is pledged to respect the property of the camp and to refrain from the use of the camp or the people of the visited city. Needs are small. "It would not take much to start a camp in Janesville," stated Mrs. J. M. Clarke Friday. "Once started the camp can be improved with equipment found necessary. The visitors and strangers appreciate greatly these camps."

Equipment Desired. Some of the needed equipment for the starting of a camp in Janesville was declared to be: 1. Running water. 2. A system of signs starting some distance from the city indicating the direction of the camp and the direction to follow signs that have directions to a camp with the post-office as the guiding point. Establish the camp on a main highway and have conspicuous signs. It was said.

3. For Janesville—some form of a shelter house might be needed. There is little rain in Florida. A rough building to give shelter in event of a hard rain storm would form an important part of a northern camp equipment. 4. A system of garbage collection, garbage receptacles and toilets.

5. Electric lights to burn a few hours in the evening. Motorists obtain light for their tents generally from their motor cars. Camps are complete. "In the Florida camp, they have shower baths, fire wood and each morning a wagon comes in, bringing fresh vegetables and country produce. "Even mail is distributed. In Tampa the city granted a fund of $20,000 a year to be spent for the camp and entertaining the tourists. Site Is Proposed. Janesville is on the main trunk highway leading to Kilbourn where thousands go each year. The Janesville road to Dodgeville, through the state, is to be built of concrete within a few years. The Edgerton road is now partly built of concrete. The Kilbourn road from Madison via Jarabow is one of the best in the state. This highway will be used by tourists going to the Twin Cities enroute to Glacier national park and the Dakota scenic spots. The Black and yellow trail from Chicago to the Black Hills is through Janesville. People coming from the south will pass through Janesville by the Rockford-Bellevue concrete road enroute to the northern lake districts. The Grove property along North Washington street above the hospital, it was declared, would make an ideal site for a tourist camp, being along the trunk highway and the grounds is also prepared for a camp. QUAINT FLAVOR IN STORY OF ST. OLAF; MOST UNIQUE CHOIR

Prof. Paul G. Schmidt, manager of St. Olaf's Lutheran choir which is to sing next Sunday afternoon in the church theater, is Director of the choir. The choir is the most unique choir in the state, being composed of young men and women from the Swedish Lutheran families of Minnesota. Years ago a young musician came out from Sweden to study in the St. Olaf's chapel and teach singing in the college.

He loved the music of Bach, as all organists do. He found much to sing in the music of the St. Olaf's choir. He found much to sing in the music of the St. Olaf's choir. He found much to sing in the music of the St. Olaf's choir.

Corinne Griffith, the prettiest Vitaphone star, has just been in New York city. I know it because I got a dozen pictures from some kind person who said so. They said that all the planning and decorating of the apartment was in the hands of Miss Griffith herself. Also, they whispered, via the typewriter, that she was always in the foreground, but she was so bewitching that I am sure if she were in it I should be very favorably impressed with her suite, whatever it may look like. The accompanying photograph shows Miss Griffith in a corner of the living room of her apartment. She is sitting in her favorite chair, which belonged to her grandfather who lived in the city. It is only lately that it has resumed its olden use as a bullet passed through it during the storming period of 1811-1815. Well, how do you like her new apartment?

ALL ABOARD! Now that the spring and summer season has started in earnest we may expect to hear of many of our local stars and producers going abroad. In fact we might say many of them are already on their way out. The first to leave is the famous actress, Corinne Griffith, who is going to Europe on a holiday and to visit Italy and France. Mr. Farnum has been working very hard all winter and this trip is in the nature of a vacation. A group of other celebrities getting ready for a trip abroad are Pearl White, who leaves May 12, and Elliott Dexter, who expects to spend a few months on the other side. This order was obeyed and dispatched to the situation there is not considered serious. The incident was the outgrowth of an intrigue of the anti-socialists to seize the city with the help of the remnants of the forces formerly commanded by General Kappell, anti-bolshevik leader in Siberia. ## WITH THE WOMEN OF TODAY

Mrs. E. C. T. Miller.

Cleveland, Ohio. — One of the only woman theatrical producers and director in the middle west. She is Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, well-known society woman and suffragist. Mrs. Miller recently took over the direction of the Prospect theater stock company.

"The public wants the better plays," according to Mrs. Miller, and she intends to give them what they want. "I will produce plays by the younger playwrights and American playwrights and plays recommended by the American Drama League, also plays which have not been produced in Cleveland and plays which are new and popular and clean."

One thing which Mrs. Miller aims to do is to give Cleveland plays for children and when she says children she means any young folk between the ages of eight and eighteen. Her first production after taking over the stock company was "Daddies." Mrs. Miller expects to make use of the new star-lessee syndicate idea in some of her later plays. These syndicates lease stars to producers for a week or more and by this means she can get a good star for some special part in a play and use her stock company as a good background. Theater management is a new venture for Mrs. Miller, but she has always been active in her various interests. She has been editor of the "Bluebird Magazine" for some time. This is a magazine, and practically the only popular magazine, dealing with birds and bird lore.

Brooklyn Wants More Cash from Outside Pupils

Residents of the village of Brooklyn and parents of the 22 children residing in District No. 2 town of Union who send their children to the Brooklyn schools are deeply interested in a meeting called for 8 o'clock Monday evening to discuss the raising of the tuition rates asked by the villagers who claim that the parents of children living outside the village are not paying enough tuition.

The Children living in this district in Rock county have for years been going to the Brooklyn schools in Green county, because of the excellent schools offered and because of the large expense in keeping up a district school with one teacher, which yearly amounts to about $2,000. Up to last year the children were transported to the school by wagon. This district purchased a truck last year and made it into a bus, costing approximately $800, for this purpose. This has been used all year. The district last year paid $125 for tuition to Brooklyn. Under the act of the legislature the maximum amount to be paid for each non-resident pupil attending a graded school is $1.75 per month. This is the amount paid to Brooklyn by the residents of Rock county. There are 5 high school pupils who attend the Brooklyn high school who pay $2 per month. The authorities of Brooklyn claim this is not sufficient.

The meeting is being looked forward to with interest. It will probably be necessary to ask the legislature to pass a bill increasing the amount which must be paid. O. D. 84% of All Failures Were
Non-Advertisers

These are the 1920 figures of the big commercial agencies.

They are interesting statistics, yet there is nothing remarkable in the facts disclosed.

The concern that advertises recognizes that advertising is the greatest and cheapest selling force

we have today.

And moreover, the advertising is in itself evidence of business life. It is enthusiasm for quality and service bubbling out into print.

All advertising does not succeed. Sometimes it is badly done. Ad-

goods will invariably win.

The foundation of advertising success is picking the right markets and the right medium. The national advertiser who starts on this basis plans intelligently and has the battle half won.

The right medium for reaching the largest number of customers, at the lowest cost, in any market, is the daily newspaper.

A Sweetheart at Thirty

The Story of a Woman's Transformation
BY MARION RUBINCAM

CHAPTER XVI.
EXCITED PLANS.

I was plunged into a perfect whirlpool of excitement from the day after my return home.

As he had promised, Francis brought his mother and the next morning to take me to his Mother's to dinner. We lingered for perhaps a few moments in my little living room, for there were so many things to talk about—and it was charming to talk while Francis held my hands or his arms were around me.

I had already put on my best satin dress—noticing with some concern that it was not the color I had chosen, and that it was not the style I had hoped for. I was so excited that I did not know how much it had been done over. My excitement increased as we went down the stairs. The dress I had chosen was a simple style; the dress I had been given was a masterpiece of a century-old period. All the woodwork gleamed with ivory white enamel.

"Place all I wanted to do to the place," he said. "When we come back you can choose the color combinations, the papers and hangings and all the rest of it. Look here—this is our suite. Do you like it?"

I turned to him, and nodded my head. I could not trust myself to speak at just that instant. For there were some things that were beyond words, and some forms of happiness that could only be expressed in silence.

Mrs. Meade had evidently made up her mind to make the best of a situation she would not have chosen, and to do it gracefully. And for this I admired her immensely.

She kissed me affectionately, and took me into her room, where for an hour we went over the list of people who were to be invited to the wedding—which was to be the greatest sort of ceremony—and those to whom announcements were to be sent afterwards. I smiled a little to myself as I wrote the name of Mark Upjohn as one to whom an announcement was to be sent. For there was a certain amount of mystery about the wedding, and Mrs. Meade very sweetly offered to put them up while they were in town.

"You sail in winter weather," she said. "Have you plenty of heavy clothes?"

"Francis said I should wait and get everything in Paris," I told her, using the name vaguely. Paris was a place I merely dreamed of occasionally. While as for going there, I hadn't realized that at all as yet.

"Very good, but remember you have ten days on shipboard—and you must look well. I won't take much more of it," she said.

"How could I say that I had no money? Francis already had a few dollars. He had enough for rent and food for a few weeks.

"You will please me more than you think if you let me see a few things for you," Mrs. Meade asked, hesitatingly tempted, of course, but reluctant to take anything from her, knowing the antagonism she felt underneath.

"Do my dear," she said. "I'll always be a daughter to dress."

"My heart leaped excitedly. After all she was coming round—she would like me!

Heart and Home Problems

LETTERS MAY BE ADDRESSED TO MRS. THOMPSON, IN CARE OF THE GAZETTE.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl almost 15 and a freshman in high school. A few months ago I was walking home from a friend's house when I met a boy friend. He was a friend of my brother's, but I did not know it at the time. I met this boy several times afterwards and he came very nice to me and took me home from dinner places. My parents learned of my going with him and whipped me. Now I am never allowed to go any place unless my little brother or sister are with me. Do you think that I am being fairly treated?

I have two brothers older than I am and they were always allowed to stay out until morning if they wanted to.

This evening because I waited about 15 minutes before washing the dishes one of my brothers came down and whipped me. My father, being drunk, also came downstairs and began to whip me. I think I would have been killed if I had not run outside at the time.

Almost every day I get whipped for nothing and my mother and no one else will say a word to defend me. I am so tired of life that many times I feel as though I would like to take poison and quit it all. I keep up this life until I get old enough to leave?

BROKEN-HEARTED.

My dear little girl, at the age of 15 you are really too young to go

What Shall I Do?

Answered by VIRGINIA PAGE

A Careful Mother.

"Dear Miss Page—My mother will not allow me to go with boys, and as I am 16 years old I think I should have this permission. If you can tell me how I could get her consent I will be very much pleased. Anxious."

You will have to earn her permission. Convince her by your constant conduct that you are growing up and know how to conduct yourself. Ask her to let you have a boy and girl friend together at your home. Be careful not to let her think (or yourself either) that you want lovers, but only good boy friends. And talk it all over with her—tell her just how you feel and what you think. Never mind if she is a bit cross at first—remember that it is because she loves you so much that she is worried for fear harm might come to you. And be sure you can win her over. Ask her to join your parties and get acquainted with your friends.

Since for the Goose.

"Dear Miss Page—I am going with a fellow whom I love, but I don't know whether he cares for me or not. He scolds every time I go out with anyone, but thinks it is all right for him to go out with other girls. What shall I do?—Lonely Girl."

Keep right on going out with your friends, my dear. The fellow who scolds you, you know, and he is being very selfish to act as he does. There is absolutely no reason why he should have all the friends and good times he wants, and leave you at home lonely while he is having them, just because he doesn't want you to go out with anyone else. That's nonsense! He will like you lots better—even though he does make fuss about it at first—if you aren't a worm.

All inquiries addressed to Miss Page in care of the "What Shall I Do?" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, and the great number received. So if a personal or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and sealed envelope must be enclosed with the questions.—The Editor.

"Sunny-Hearted and Efficient" Is Mrs. Harding's Social Aide

Washington.—An agreeable, well-poised woman is Miss Laura Harlan, newly appointed secretary to Mrs. Harding. Just to catch a glimpse of the efficient, sunny-hearted Miss Harlan is to visualize the disengagement of social problems that sometimes enmesh the most capable hostess. Official Washington is united in declaring that if the new administration does as well in all its appointments as in that of Miss Harlan it will be 100 per cent successful. Rarely is there such general endorsement of a selection for any post.

Miss Harlan is the daughter of the late Justice of the Supreme Court John M. Harlan of Kentucky. After the death of her father Miss Harlan, who had lived most of her life in Washington and who was well acquainted with prominent people, became social secretary to Mrs. George W. Wickersham, wife of the attorney general in the Taft cabinet.

Later Miss Harlan became the secretary of Mrs. William Phillips, wife of the assistant secretary of state, and acted in the same capacity to Mrs. Frank Polk, wife of the under secretary of state, and Mrs. Norman Davis, whose husband was chief of the state department.

When the McAdams first came to Washington and before Mr. McAdams' marriage to Miss Wilson, Miss Harlan was the head of the household, although only a girl still in her teens. Miss Harlan was called in to help out in this difficult situation and the McAdams household found social life in Washington untroubled with complications and difficulties as it is generally reputed to be. After Mr. McAdams married Miss Wilson, Miss Harlan continued as Mrs. McAdams' secretary.

Secretary to British.

Lord Reading also needed a secretary when he came to this country as special diplomatic representative of Great Britain. It was considered desirable to have an American woman as secretary in order that American susceptibilities along all lines should be carefully regarded. Miss Harlan was asked to take this post also.

At the time of her appointment by Mrs. Harding, Miss Harlan was acting as special secretary to the British ambassador, Lord Curzon, wife of the ambassador of Argentina. Mrs. Marshall, wife of the former vice president, was her own special secretary most of the time, but occasionally when her many activities had piled up even more than usual or when she had come back from Washington and came back to find herself lost in a sea of correspondence, too, called upon Miss Harlan for assistance.

The new White House social secretary is a strong, fine looking woman whose bright eyes, clear complexion and general aspect of health and sturdiness tell the story of long walks out of doors, peaceful hours upon the banks and restful summers in the Canadian woods, when the gaieties of Washington have been over. Miss Harlan likes out of door pleasures and pursues them quite as ardently as if she had no interest whatever in helping to create perfect entertainments in Washington society during the season.

Woman of Great Charm.

She is a woman of great charm of manner, and her personal dignity, sweetness and tact make her a valuable asset to the hostess who is receiving men and women of many social groups, such as members of the diplomatic corps, bringing with them traditions of foreign etiquette; plain simple folk from out of town who don't want to be bothered with etiquette at all, except with that required by fundamental good manners; folks of widely different training and experience.

Understanding, sympathy and cheerfulness have been the foundations of Miss Harlan's success. To these are added the social polish natural to a woman of her birth and training.

Miss Harlan is said to be an expert in reading out a dinner list so that combustible materials may be either left out altogether or sealed at points that are comparatively fireproof. Her wide acquaintance has made her an expert in arranging

The Letters of Tessie and Joe

DEAR JOE:

Well Joe here I am back home again, baby and all. After all Joe there's no place like home, especially not relations' houses. Not that my sister Gerty was what you might call up and down inhospitable, but she did drop several ambiguous remarks, such as that she hated company and that a lady's place is in its own home and that she was glad I had told her in advance I was coming because she can't stand unpleasant surprises.

Well Joe I guess you know I can respond to a hint as quick as the next one, so after the second day of repeatedly continual remarks of that tender on the part of Gerty I spoke of packing my bag to go, thinking that would be a good way to find out her real feelings on the subject, and when she offered to help me pack I just simply decided then and there to call her bluff and really go. Of course I may have misjudged Gerty because she really did bid me goodbye with much more animation than she showed when I arrived.

Hilma my Finnish maid is still with me. In fact she's stayed so long now that I'm beginning to be suspicious of her and I'd be really uneasy if I had any jewelry or anything to be uneasy about, not that I'm saying that to recall attention to the fact that you've never bought me that diamond ring you've been promising me year after year. The only thing Hilma does that seems suspicious is to continually leave the door of the ice box open, which is bad for the ice, especially the brand of ice that the ice man has been leaving lately, which melts without the slightest encouragement. I suppose it's not very well frozen or something. Anyway, do you think Hilma is in league with the ice man and leaves the door of the ice box open to help the ice melt?

Love from self and child.

WITH THE WOMEN OF TODAY

Mrs. Annette Abbott Adams, assistant attorney general of the United States, recently secured the tender of men to create new positions for women instead of giving them a chance at the jobs already existing. "There are only a few instances, even in the suffrage states, of women holding political office," according to Mrs. Adams. "The tendency of men is to create new jobs for women in order to prevent us from meddling with things they like to do themselves. We women must work from the inside out, not from the outside in. The only way for us to learn enough about governmental affairs to be competent to handle departments is to get into the departments. Women should get into established positions, not have new places created for them on the outside. They do not want to be side-tracked."

Mrs. Adams went to Washington almost a year ago as the first woman attorney general in the country. She had been assistant United States attorney since 1912.

She recently went on record as being against the suggestion proposed that a woman's welfare department be put in the president's cabinet. The plan suggested that all matters concerning women be put in the welfare department. Mrs. Adams does not believe in segregating women's interests and problems in that fashion. She has also gone on record as saying that women jurors are competent and glad to serve in the court room. She based her judgment on her experience with women jurors in California.

BRITISH ATTACHE'S WIFE IS POPULAR AT THE CAPITAL

Mrs. Charles E. D. Bridge, wife of the assistant military attaché of the British embassy at Washington, is one of the new arrivals at the capital. She and her husband have been much liked since they arrived. She is noted a charming addition to the diplomatic set.

637 Leads Pin Singles--Ball Club Stays in Industrial

RAFT OF CHANGES IN FRIDAY'S WORK IN LOCAL TOURNAMENT

Friday was a day of many changes in the Southern Wisconsin bowling tournament being held at the West Side bowling alley here. The first real score of the meet was rushed through when Herb Lange brought his hook ball down from Waterloo and secured the pin for a first place and the individual event, setting himself in first place. With his partner, Fred Marzke, he dropped 1163 in the doubles, which lands the pair in fourth place. Lange also finished in the all events with 1751 for third place, three pins back of Kirkoff of Janesville. He threw the marbles for a 607 count in the doubles and 507 in the five men. His scores in the singles were 223-192-222.

Bake-Rites Fourth. Friday evening, the Bake-Rites of this city slid into fourth place in the five men with a total of 2386, but it was not until they were in the position. The bakers struck a streak of hard luck. It became a struggle with them, a single pin standing after a seemingly perfect strike. They started good with 506, but then dropped back.

The famous Wilkowski High Life 1163 in the doubles and did not display their usual form. The best they could do was 2150, which placed them sixth. Willie Kuenzle and Bob Lucke gathered 1959 in the doubles, placing them seventh. Kuenzle picked up 574 pins in the singles, landing 117 Hard.

After the Waterloo men had warmed up the wood, Schlatter's Rites of this city took the alley and made things hum. The team smashed 2538. The team of Lindley and Stewart, who had a 544 count giving him the special prize for high three games, won the high individual game prize and the team total takes the other special award. Altogether it was a bad day for the Waterloo members of which had this money "all spent."

Elmer Stewart, Jess Schlatter and "Hose" Carey dead-headed with 469 counts, while Will Sarow helped with 538. Lindley and Stewart rolled the doubles and started down grade, but they ran into an open switch. After they had been picked up and dusted off, they could count only 958 pins. Stewart's string of strikes and a 200 count featured the first game.

Milwaukee Sunday. Nelson and Foulus of the Bake-Rites shot their doubles and singles but could not do business in either event.

Sunday two Milwaukee teams and two Madison five take the drives at noon. A five from Clinton Junction rolls in the evening.

The Tractor City Athletic association baseball club, formerly the Samson Tractors, will remain in the Central Industrial league.

This was voted at a meeting of the club held at the Morrison hotel, Chicago, Friday. L. A. Markham of the Samson company will be retained as secretary of the league. It was also decided that the local club will be paid by the association.

Both Secretary Markham and George Perling, manager of the Janesville team, attended the meeting. Several matters of importance to the local organization are under consideration with decisions to be rendered Monday.

Smithson Due Today.

At the same time as this announcement was made Saturday, it was also stated that John Smithson, new left handed pitcher for the locals, was due to arrive here at noon. He probably will be sent out at practice with the players at the fair grounds Saturday afternoon.

"Dip" Grabe, Duluth Clyde Iron Works first baseman and outfielder, was also expected Saturday to remain here for a few days to work out with the local boys. He has many friends on the Tractors and wants to get in trim here.

A meeting of the officials of the local club will be held Sunday afternoon.

Stars Take on Beloit Guard

Saturday night, local fans will have their last chance of seeing the All-Stars on the basket court here this year against an out of town team. Their opponents will be the first separate company of Beloit.

Out of all 31 games, the Stars have played this year this promises to be the best. While the Gateway city team is out for revenge, every one on the Beloit team has seen service as a high school team. Russ Belmer, on last year's Beloit college team, Blumhardt, center, saw a year on a Badger team.

Beloit has played only 21 games, but they have lost only three running up 35 points against the Madison guard company. The lineup:

Janesville ..... Beloit
Hager ..... Blanchard
Cullen ..... Ehrke
Fauler ..... Belmer

Carp to Sail for U.S. Soon

Caldow's Five Loses to Monroe

With a big crowd of howling fans, including a bunch of Janesville rooters for Caldow's team, Monroe Badgers licked Monicello at Monroe Friday night, 35 to 11. It was Monroe's game from start to finish. Led by Reed, said to be a ringer from Bellevue into a swift pace that gave them a 15 to 3 lead at half time. It was the last game of the season for Monroe.

Cleveland.—Cleveland defeated Eveleth, Minn., in the first of 5 games for the American hockey championship, Friday.

Confessions of a Matrimonial Swindler

How a Bogus Matrimonial Agent Robbed Women of Their Money.
By Arnold Maulineaux.

"The detective recognised the doctor and nodded.

"Mortimer, Dr. Walters," he questioned quietly.

"Apparently," the medical man answered as he rose from his knees.

"A blow near the heart."

"How long has he been dead?"

"It is difficult to say," was the thoughtful answer. "Perhaps half an hour, perhaps a little more."

My heart seemed to stand still as I heard the amazing statement.

"Would the blow have caused instantaneous death?" the inspector asked crisply.

"I cannot say definitely," Dr. Walters replied. "It is just possible that such a blow could render a man unconscious without causing death immediately, but it is not probable."

Richard Shanford dropped on one knee and he heard him draw a quick breath as he looked at watch from under his pocket.

Details imprinted themselves on my dazed mind mechanically, and I realised that the glances were broken to his feet. Shanford glanced at my Martine to myself.

"Who found him?" she asked curtly.

"I did," I said, surprised at the steadiness of my own voice.

Richard Shanford motioned towards the uniformed policeman, who took a notebook and pencil from his pocket.

"Your name, sir?" Richard Shanford jerked out.

"Charles North," I replied.

"Address?"

"I gave the address of the rooms I had rented in the name of Charles North when I started on my plot to victimize Amy Martine."

"What time?" Shanford asked in the same curt, official tone.

"I know it was useless to her; the maid, Maggie Andrews, would be able to state the time I had arrived at the house."

"Half-past ten," I answered. "I had an appointment with Mr. Pragnell at that time."

"You found him lying dead at half-past ten?"

"And, of course, you raised an alarm immediately?"

"Not—not immediately," I replied, striving desperately to appear cool.

"I—I was alone," I said. "A few minutes later, I think I was a bit dazed, finding Mr. Pragnell lying there, and I—I hardly knew what to do."

"Expression did not change."

"Who admitted you to the house?"

"The maid, Maggie Andrews."

"The trembling maid entered the room, shuddering as she glanced down at the motionless form of her dead master."

"The gentleman came at half-past ten," she said, in answer to Inspector Shanford's question.

"Did you bring him up here?"

"No; he said he wanted to see the master, and he came up alone."

"What next?" Shanford questioned.

"I was on the landing," the girl answered. "I saw Mr. North open the library door and look out. He—he looked all upset, and he said some thing had happened to the master. I thought the master was ill, and I was in here and switched on the light, and I—I saw him lying there."

"Switched on the light?" Richard Shanford repeated slowly. "This room was in darkness then?"

The girl nodded.

"Did you notice the time?"

"Yes, I looked at the clock, and it was just twenty minutes of eleven."

"Still that mask of inscrutability on his face made it impossible for me to read the inspector's thoughts; the fear in my heart was increasing. I felt that an invisible net was tightening about me."

"You admitted Mr. North at half-past ten," Shanford said slowly.

"A few minutes later when he told you something was wrong, and then you found this room in darkness."

"When you saw Mr. North open the library door, did he run out quickly?"

"Did he appear excited?"

"Maggie Andrews shook her head. "No," he just looked out, and he seemed queer when he saw me."

"Did he, perhaps, give you the impression that he might be about to leave the house?"

"I could not repress a start; I knew quite well that Richard Shanford was exceeding his authority in the line of questioning he was adopting, but I kept silent. With every moment my feeling was increasing that I was in deadly peril."

"He—he seemed as if he might be," the maid admitted.

"The inspector turned and regarded me searchingly."

"You need not answer my questions unless you care to, Mr. North," he said. "It is my duty to question you."

"I have nothing to hide," I said. "I am not to speak truthfully. I will answer any questions you like to ask."

"Ah! Then I should be interested to know why you waited ten minutes before you went to raise an alarm after you discovered this crime?"

"I have told you," I answered. "I don't think it was as long as that, but when I found what had happened, I—I was so horrified that I did not know what to do."

"I was cursing myself as I spoke, cursing my own rank stupidity for the way I had acted. I could see that it pointed to guilt, and there was an uncomfortable sensation at my throat."

"And you stooped to turn out the light before you raised an alarm?"

Richard Shanford went on. "What made you do that?"

"I—I don't know," I muttered. "Can you expect a man to account for every little thing he does immediately after he has discovered a murder?"

"No, perhaps not," was the quiet answer. "Amy Martine had not spoken; she had been standing motionless by my side. Now she moved forward quickly and confronted the man who was questioning me accusingly. Charles!"

"You are accusing Charles?" she cried, her voice rising hysterically. "He—he did not do this dreadful thing, my uncle insulted him to-day, but—"

"She caught herself up, and I saw Shanford's expression change."

"Insulted him, Miss Martine?" he repeated. "Do you mean that there was a quarrel?"

"Let me answer, dear," I said, springing into my voice a note of tenderness that I was far from feeling. "There was an unfortunate quarrel to-day, Mr. Shanford, between Mr. Pragnell and myself."

"Yes, what about?" he queried.

"I told him as briefly as possible, and his keen, penetrating eyes turned to Maggie Andrews."

"Did you hear anything of it, my girl?" he asked.

"Yes, I—I heard something," she answered. "And so did Mrs. Bert-ran."

The detective questioned them both, and it was obvious from their answers that they had been eavesdropping near the study earlier in the day. I felt that their statements were tightening the net that was closing round me."

Richard Shanford stood rubbing his chin thoughtfully for a few moments, then glanced at Amy again.

"Who saw your uncle last," he asked, "before Mr. North found him here?"

"My cousin, Dudley," she answered. "He was here this evening."

"At what time?"

"Soon after eight, I think. I did not see him. Maggie let him in."

"It was about a quarter-past eight, sir," the maid volunteered. "Mr. Dudley left again about twenty minutes to nine. I heard him saying good-night to the master."

"Where does Mr. Dudley Pragnell live?"

Amy supplied the address and Richard Shanford spoke to the uniformed policeman in an undertone.

"No need to tell him what has happened, Stevens," I heard him say as the latter turned to the door.

The minutes seemed to drag like hours after the policeman had gone. Richard Shanford asked me a number of other questions, and despite my efforts to appear calm, I knew that I grew confused.

"You have no right to suspect me of this ghastly thing," I broke out at last trying to feign honest indignation. "You have not an atom of proof to substantiate—"

"I am not so sure, sir," Shanford interrupted calmly. "When Mr. Pragnell was struck, he evidently fell on his side, and then rolled over on his back. He broke his watch face when he fell."

"What has that got to do with it?" I demanded.

The detective's face hardened.

"The watch stopped at exactly twenty-five minutes to eleven."

CHAPTER VI.

I could no longer conceal the fear that consumed me.

"It is my duty to question you," I exclaimed.

"Possibly," Richard Shanford replied with a slight shrug of his square shoulders. "I will take your fingerprints, if you have no objection."

I raised no protest, and a few moments later Dudley Pragnell entered with the policeman.

"Good-night," he gasped out when he saw his uncle's body. "It—it is murder."

"Yes, it's murder, sir," the inspector said grimly. "I understand you called on your uncle this evening?"

"Yes, I was here soon after a quarter-past eight, and I left about twenty minutes to nine."

"Nothing unusual happened while you were here?"

"Nothing," my uncle and I were talking over business matters, and while we were doing so, he received a telephone message."

"Do you know who from?"

Dudley Pragnell glanced at me, and I saw the blood in his eyes.

"From that man," he said. "They quarreled this afternoon, and my uncle told me Charles North had threatened him. He rang up, and insisted on seeing my uncle tonight, and I heard uncle say he would see him at half-past ten. He telephoned at half-past eight; I can fix the time because I heard the clock on the mantelpiece threaten like the hour."

I remember my uncle glanced at his watch and found it wrong, and he wound it up."

"You're sure he did that, sir?" Inspector Shanford asked.

"Quite sure. Why do you ask?"

Instead of answering the inspector swung round and touched my arm.

"You're my prisoner, Charles North," he snapped out harshly.

The next minute I was in the street, walking like a man in a dream between two inspectors and a policeman. Never shall I forget my sensations of despairing horror when I found myself alone at last, in a small cell-like apartment, furnished only with a stool and a pullet-bed. I paced restlessly to and fro like a caged beast, and more than once, I raised my clenched hands aloft and cursed aloud at my own folly.

I was pacing up and down still when a waiter brought me my breakfast.

"When—when shall I be charged?" I asked, and my voice sounded hoarse and unnatural in my own ears.

"The man went out without answering. I could not eat, and I paced to and fro, mulling over to myself, trying to find out some ray of hope. For years I had led a life of careless crime, and now—now I was in danger of suffering for a crime of which I was innocent."

At last the door opened again, the waiter returned, and I was led to a room where Inspector Shanford stood with a tall, well-dressed, keen-faced man. They both regarded me searchingly for a few moments, and then Shanford spoke. Never had I heard words that surprised me more.

My SOCIETY VICTIM.

My private register lies open before me—that big red-bound volume I kept at the offices of my bogus matrimonial agency, in which to enter the names and addresses of trusting, credulous women and girls I meant to victimize, together with any personal details which I thought might be of assistance in my mercenary plans.

Turning the neatly-ruled, methodically-arranged leaves, I came to a page only partly filled, and my finger rests upon the last name of all—Beatrice Verincourt, whom I duped after my last adventure in America. The second man remarked gravely: "You will be wanted as a witness at the inquest tomorrow, and afterwards at the trial. You will be at the inquest, you gave to Inspector Shanford?"

"Yes, I—I shall be there," I muttered.

I did not stay to ask questions, the door was open for me to go, and I rushed out into the night, and into the room I had rented in my character of Charles North, and found myself down into a chair, scarcely able to realize that I had been released.

It was not until afterwards that I learnt the truth, and realized that I had done just what I had feared. It was Dudley Pragnell who had committed the crime. Hard-pressed by money-lenders and utterly what profit the transaction had yielded me. There is no such entry against the name of Beatrice Verincourt.

Opening a drawer to my side, I took out a faded portrait and a crumpled newspaper cutting. The cutting bears the heavy headlines:—SOCIETY BEAUTY'S SAD FEND.

ACCIDENT OR SUICIDE?

How many girls who read these remorseful confessions of mine have written a similar inscription on their portrait before sending it to the man to whom they have given their love? If they really know the man to be worthy, if his courting has been honorable and above board, if he has not been afraid to meet their parents—to prove the genuineness of his love by laying open the pages of his life. But I offer solemn warning to every girl whose lover is a man of whom she knows practically nothing—a man whose courting is done furtively, or who tries to hasten her to a secret marriage. That way lies misery and heartache—perhaps the terrible fate of poor Beatrice Verincourt.

My long career of nefarious victimization of women and girls of all classes taught me much of the science of physiognomy, and I can read many truths from the portrait.

My hand trembles visibly as I lay the cutting aside and pick up the faded photograph. It is not easy to describe the face upon which I look when the guilty activities there made it too uncomfortable to remain there longer. So I crossed over to England and there started my operations.

When I had brought any one of my schemes to a conclusion, to make an entry in red ink against the name of the unhappy victim, starting exactly what profit the transaction had yielded me. There is no such entry against the name of Beatrice Verincourt.

Perhaps the only trace of weakness in the face is betrayed by the mouth; it is just a little too trustful—too credulous. The lofty brow and firm nose both speak of nobility of character and unswerving loyalty; they are the features of one who would lay down his life rather than prove delusory to a friend. The eyes are the most striking feature, beautiful eloquent eyes, with a twinkle of mischief and dark lurking in their blue depths. A beautiful face!

In the lower right-hand corner of the photograph, written in bold characters, is the four-word inscription:—

"WITH ALL MY LOVE."

How many girls who read these remorseful confessions of mine have written a similar inscription on their portrait before sending it to the man to whom they have given their love? # Plump Baby Gurgles His Way Into Home on Farm

"Fritzie," the husky youngster and favorite from Mercy hospital, has a new home. You see, Fritzie was born in Mercy hospital on October 23, 1920. On that day he opened his eyes, cried a little, and blinked at things around the hospital room. Fritzie remembered a young girl who cried a lot and would hold him close.

A week or ten days later this young girl left and Fritzie went with her. The girl who called him "son" still cried a lot. Then one night something strange happened. This girl wrapped Fritzie up in a blanket and took him to the hospital and at the door she took Fritzie out of the blanket, hugged him tight with a long kiss, kissed him on the cheek and then she was put back in the hospital room. Fritzie was so frightened at being left all alone out in the dark.

Pretty soon a woman came and on seeing the baby, squalling his loud cry, she looked surprised.

"Why is Fritzie back again?" said this woman as she took the basket and baby inside.

Fritzie thought this a little queer. This woman had mothered him for some time, even if she did cry a lot. After that when Fritzie cried, yelled and kicked the covers of his crib near dinner time, a trim girl in a white uniform came to attend him. She was a different woman, but most always she was dressed in a white and striped uniform with a cute white hat. They all called Fritzie a bit for that didn't worry Fritzie a bit for there was someone always around to answer his cries, to attend to his baby wants and needs. At other times a kindly faced woman with long robes came in and Fritzie would coo and gurgle baby talk for these women, evidently "sisters" of everyone, were kind to him.

Had Much Attention.

Fritzie had a nice crib in a white room, all spick and span, but still there was something wrong. He wanted a big man to come around, to let him hear a woman's voice. Of course the woman dressed in white would pick him up for an enjoyable cuddle, then a little bell would tinkle, and the women would have to hurry away. It wasn't exactly right.

They petted him, they fed him, and everything, but they didn't call him son.

Along in February some strange people happened to see Fritzie. They noticed his big round eyes, his plump body, and his little hands and feet. Fritzie decided he rather liked this man and woman. He therefore cooed his best. He saw them talking to one side a bit and he just knew they were talking about him.

"We'd just love to have him out of our farm," said the strangers to a woman dressed in black robes.

Is Taken to Farm.

Fritzie just laughed and didn't cry a bit. So the two strangers wrapped him up in woolly blankets and they took him a long, long, an awfully long way into a strange world, where everything wasn't white and silent. It was so different from the hospital. They rode into a big yard where there were big buildings. Fritzie peeked out from under the covers and saw a big animal come bounding across the yard and then he saw strange things, all feathery, that ran around the yard making queer noises. He blinked his eyes and thought, "last how much sport a little later it would be to play with that furry animal that barked and chased the feathered animals that clucked."

Inside the house a youngster came and inspected Fritzie and the babe, heard something about "a dandy brother."

They Adopt Him.

One day, a strange man came in

Theater Goes Eat Lunch Between Acts in Vienna

Theater managers complain that the unholy hour of their houses is being ruined by the new habit of playgoers bringing their suppers and eating them during the entire acts. Because of the lighting and transport restrictions performances here begin at from six to seven o'clock. The result is that persons cannot go home from business and after the theater the restaurants have closed. It is said that dozens of sardine boxes and other meat cases, crumbs of bread and cheese and meat scraps are swept up after each performance while all the filth and dirt is cradled into carts and rubbed in the seats. It is not unusual to see a family open up the supper, produce wine and glasses and calmly dine between the acts.

HEMP HAT SHOWS ODD FEATHER TRIM

A new hat is the magic wand for disclosing the hidden beauties of a demure face. That a hat may make or break a woman is no new theory, and with the present prices it is very likely to do both. Here is a large blue hemp model with a double brim rolling upward all the way around. The trimming is an arrangement of gray coque feathers which are fastened to the crown and drawn through a slit in the brim, falling down over the shoulder. This method of letting trimming fall from the underneath side of the hat is the very newest fad.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Written and Publication Authorized by The Young Men's Business Club, and paid for by them at the rate of 85c per inch.

One of the most important problems before the city is the elimination of dangerous grade crossings. Not only are the residents of the First and Fifth wards concerned but all citizens realize that some means must be found to make safe the traffic ways over the railway tracks.

Mayor Welsh has given the special committee representing the First and Fifth wards every co-operation in getting started the movement for elimination of dangerous crossings. He has worked with that committee and has utilized every opportunity to obtain definite and quick action. The most cordial relations between the mayor and the committee exist. No man could do more than Mayor Welsh has done in this matter. He has appeared with the committee before the railroad commission and has presented the city's case. The railroad commission has hundreds of similar petitions before it, according to information coming from Madison. It would be impossible to make greater progress in the local situation as long as the railroad commission is unable to act.

Mayor Welsh has stated time and time again that he is in favor of any plan which is feasible for the correction of these dangerous crossings. It is conceded by all parties interested that the railroads as well as the city are not able to finance a track elevation. The city engineer and the engineers of the railroad companies are now at work on plans for some sort of a viaduct which can be built.

Mayor Welsh has assured the Young Men's Business club that as soon as feasible plans are presented he will do everything in his power to bring the crossing project to a successful completion. This comes to the club not as merely a pre-election promise made for campaign purposes but has been the repeated assertion made by the mayor whenever the subject has been discussed.

The Young Men's Business club admires Mayor Welsh for his public-spirited attitude. Not only during his administration as mayor but during his life-time as a resident of Janesville has his purse been open and his time been at the command of every charitable and patriotic movement that has been instigated. He took part in all the war activities both as a financial contributor and as a most zealous worker. His pocket has never been closed to any civic need. He has shown his Americanism to be 100 per cent.

The Young Men's Business club has checked back on Mayor Welsh's appointments to ascertain if he has been partial in his selection of those who fill important city offices. The club is willing to leave it to the judgment of the citizens of Janesville by presenting a list of those who have been named to fill these posts. They are: Fire and Police Commission: H. O. Nowlan, Dr. G. C. Wauffe; City Plan Commission: F. C. Grant, J. E. Auten, William McVicar, O. E. Oestrich, (Mr. Oestrich replaced Mr. Auten, resigned), E. F. Kelly and James True, appointed by the council; Board of Health: H. H. Bliss, Harry Garbutt, Joseph M. Connors; Library Board: L. A. Markham to succeed J. E. Auten, resigned. All other appointees on this board made to succeed themselves upon expiration of their terms. School Board: George Croft, Charles Muggleton, recommended by request of citizens of their wards. These recommendations were approved by the council.

Appointments to the election boards were made from lists furnished by the aldermen of the several wards to the mayor on the evening of their appointment by him.

These appointments indicate to the Young Men's Business club that Mayor Welsh has attempted to get the best men obtainable to fill important places in the city's administrative body. It shows that he has not allowed religious prejudice to sway him.

Can we afford to "Swap Horses in the middle of the stream?"

All AMERICAN citizens who are eligible to vote, even though they are not registered, can be sworn in at the polls on election day.
